in master and man tolstoy explores the effects imminent death has on a man s perceptions of his own life and how this parley with death can be a revelatory occurrence the spiritual crisis and epiphany seen in master and man a result of the intimate encounter with death fosters a numinous redemption for brekhunov as he rejects his former corrupt values and sacrifices his own worldly existence the story also underscores class differences as the two men s social standing informs their reaction to the crisis nikita the servant humbly accepts his fate brekhunov the master attempts to command his own destiny when brekhunov confronts death and accepts its utter inevitability he embraces a master greater than the self another significant theme in master and man is the mastery of god or nature whereas the fantastic and omnipotent snowstorm renders the two capable men virtually blind and impotent symbolizing the protagonist brekhunov's plight as a man spiritually bereft lost in a tempest of superficial and corrupt meanings there is an ultimate redemption
