Understanding the Fundamentals of IBS and Elimination Diets

IBS is a chronic functional disorder of the digestive system characterized by abdominal pain bloating altered bowel habits diarrhea constipation or both and gas The exact cause is unknown but its widely believed to involve a complex interplay of factors including the gut brain axis bacterial imbalances and food sensitivities An elimination diet works on the principle of systematically removing suspected trigger foods from the diet to identify and subsequently avoid those that exacerbate symptoms Imagine your gut as a sensitive garden Certain foods like invasive weeds can disrupt the delicate balance of your gut flora and cause discomfort The elimination diet aims to identify these weeds and remove them allowing your gut flora to thrive and recover its natural equilibrium

The Core Principles of an IBS Elimination Diet Meal Plan

This meal plan is a template and needs individual tailoring Consult with a healthcare professional or registered dietitian before making significant dietary changes especially if you have underlying health conditions

Phase 1 The Elimination Phase 46 weeks

FODMAPs

2 Caffeine and Alcohol

Known to affect bowel movements

Phase 2 The Reintroduction Phase 24 weeks

Slowly reintroduce eliminated foods one at a time to observe how your body reacts This is crucial Note any symptoms experienced and document them meticulously If a particular food causes a flareup its likely a trigger an elimination diet is eating only that most affordable group of foods that you can live on for a period of time and then reintroducing them during a challenge period so you can learn which foods are causing your symptoms. While we often think of reactions to food as allergic reactions such as when a person has an allergic reaction to a nut and their throat will swell up however there are other ways our bodies react to foods that may not be immediately obvious. Some reactions are tied to the immune system and some are not. Some reactions may be triggered by very natural substances found in food natural sugars or proteins are common food additives such as natural and artificial flavors preservatives and colorants and flavor enhancers that can cause reactions through various mechanisms. Nonetheless there is a current dispute about the mechanisms involved in different reactions to food and many of the data are unreliable. Clinical experience has shown that not all food intolerance is the same. It is not always about identifying food intolerance and it is not always safe to eat a variety of foods. It is still eaten supplying all the essential nutrients. Some food intolerance can vary with the amount you eat. It can include things like bloating, headaches, hives, tingling and even vague feelings of being unwell such as flu-like symptoms and an upset stomach. These are not necessarily problems with certain foods and food groups. It is known that some reactions in people with autoimmune diseases like Crohn's disease, irritable bowel syndrome, gastroesophageal reflux disease and some autoimmune diseases are different from the autoimmune diseases. Some reactions are not specific and some are the food a person's sensitivity level and how much of the food is eaten. If the same food is eaten repeatedly or different foods with the same component are eaten together then the body may reach a threshold at which point where symptoms begin to occur.

The health elimination diet plan helps identify food intolerances and is a tool to help with digestive issues. For the most common symptoms people may start an elimination diet for several weeks with one of the main reactions being to try and see if food intolerances and sensitivities that cause digestive issues like bloating or stomach pain are affected. In a food intolerance where your body processes a certain food or foods in a different way than the way which you eat that gets rid of the discomfort. These reactions are different from a food allergy which involves the immune system and can be very dangerous if you suspect a true food allergy. We encourage you to discuss this with your medical provider or allergist in the elimination diet. In the meantime, eat a wide variety of fruits, vegetables, and snacks that include dairy, eggs, and recipes without dairy. We included the top 8 food items that are most common with food intolerances: nuts, dairy, food allergies, milk, eggs, tree nuts, nut, wheat, fish, and shellfish. We eat at 1500 calories a day but included modifications to make it 1200 or 2000 calories depending on your needs.

an elimination diet is a short term eating plan that eliminates certain foods that may be causing allergies and other digestive reactions then reintroduces the foods one at a time in order to determine which foods are and are not well tolerated the main reason for doing an elimination diet is to pinpoint exactly which foods are the culprits for digestive and other health related issues when someone is experiencing ongoing symptoms and she can't seem to figure out what's causing them symptoms that might drive someone to do an elimination diet include persistent diarrhea bloating constipation eczema and acne it's estimated that 15 million adults in the u.s. alone suffer from food allergies about 4 percent of the adult population and about 8 percent of children but these numbers don't even take into account food intolerances or food sensitivities that don't show up on allergy tests so this means the real numbers are likely a lot higher it's just another reason to test an elimination diet eight foods account for about 90 percent of all food allergy reactions milk eggs peanuts nuts wheat gluten soy fish and shellfish elimination diets range in terms of what exact foods are permitted and eliminated but most will cut out all common allergens most elimination diets last for about 3-6 weeks it's believed that antibodies the proteins your immune system makes when it negatively reacts to foods take around three weeks to dissipate so this is usually the minimum time needed for someone to fully treat from sensitivities and to notice improvements in their symptoms even when someone may think that they already eat a healthy diet if they still battle health issues that they can't resolve an elimination diet is usually extremely useful for identifying which suspected foods are truly the cause even if you've opted to have a food allergy test done at a physician's office in the past you still might be missing something because it's common for allergy tests to show negative results for underlying food sensitivities that are not true allergies yet can still cause negative symptoms a food allergy is an overreaction of the immune system to a specific food protein but similar effects can happen even when someone doesn't test positive for an allergy when food protein is ingested that isn't well tolerated it can trigger a range of reactions that may cause symptoms like rashes hives swelling trouble breathing and various digestive gi tract pains identifying and removing allergies and sensitivities is vital to overall health when you struggle with an ongoing unidentified sensitivity your body constantly sends out inflammatory responses that can cause harm in multiple ways food sensitivities and allergies are correlated with an increased chance for developing
