arguing that a new form of industrial organization is generating new patterns of inequality the authors explore the relationship between growth in the high tech sector and trends in inequality while considering the promise of high tech industries in light of the realities of high tech work the authors report considerable unevenness in the high tech sector some high tech industries fulfill optimistic expectations but others are in decline in some high tech industries work is organized in ways that generate inequality along gender racial and ethnic lines the authors link these contrasts to different strategies of flexible production building upon the distinction between static flexibility in which harsh measures are taken to control costs and dynamic flexibility in which production processes are constantly adapted to market conditions they conclude that the most innovative and successful high tech industries are those employing dynamic flexibility expansion of dynamically flexible production strategies is essential if high tech industries are to fulfill their promise this book delves into the fast track land reform programme ftrlp in zimbabwe to provide insight into how it facilitated the delivery of housing for low income urban households it highlights the politics of land reforms and the power of community engagement in housing development in urban areas prior to the ftrlp the zimbabwean governments had never embraced popular modes of housing production as key factors in urban development in the area of low income housing informal housing schemes have always been treated with apathy and indifference this left the conventional mode of housing production to be the only legitimate means to house low income households despite its shortcomings however the onset of the ftrlp in 2000 resulted in homeless urban households grasping the opportunity to invade farms for housing development through the lenses of marxism and neoliberalism this book analyses housing schemes that emerged and the overall impact of the ftrlp on housing and land delivery in harare this analysis is based on empirical evidence obtained from key informants and household surveys conducted in harare the authors argue that the ftrlp provided a platform for innovativeness by households supported by the unpronounced national urban vision and prowess of the political leadership hence the success of these housing schemes can be measured by acquisition of land which guarantees households access to the city however some of these housing schemes pose challenges key among them being lack of infrastructure the book concludes by presenting a new model for effective delivery of land and housing for the urban poor this is envisaged as a useful policy tool for urban planners housing experts land economists urban and regional geographers as well as sociologists political scientists and social workers engaged in public administration of land and housing this study assesses the future growth prospects of rwanda the report first focuses on broad economic growth using a rather aggregated 18 sector dynamic general equilibrium model to display the trade off between rapid growth and structural change the analysis shows that with the current investment pattern rapid growth is possible but structural transformation is slow with an overvalued exchange rate growth in the tradable sector slows down and its share in the economy stays small the importance of agriculture thus should be considered in the broad development strategy for its role not only in poverty reduction but also in economic growth
