W. O. Mitchell jokingly called himself the great re-run king but his retellings of age old conflicts between humanity and the devil strikingly display his versatile adaptive talents. The Black Bonspiel of Wullie MacCrimmon is a whimsical take on the Faust legend with a distinctly Canadian flavor filled with wry humor and set against the backdrop of a timeless small town dynamic. The story of Wullie MacCrimmon's curling duel with the devil combines the edginess of Marlowe's classic tale with the down to earth wry Canadian humor of Corner Gas. The Devil's instrument depicts a Hutterite teenager struggling with conformity in a Puritan society. Mitchell's Devil in this play is a figure of sympathy but lines such as "Happy I am free" invite the ambiguity of whether it is better to indulge in what seems natural or strive for the divine.
