falkner published in 1837 is the last novel by mary shelley and as we see from her letter she had been passing through a period of ill health and depression while writing it this may account for less spontaneity in the style which is decidedly more stilted but here again we feel that we are admitted to some of the circle which mary had encountered in the stirring times of her life and there is undoubted imagination with some fine descriptive passages the opening chapter introduces a little deserted child in a picturesque cornish village her parents had died there in apartments one after the other the husband having married a governess against the wishes of his relations consequently the wife was first neglected on her husband's death and on her own sudden death a few months later the child was simply left to the care of the poor people of the village a dreamy poetic little thing whose one pleasure was to stroll in the twilight to the village churchyard and be with her mamma here she was found by falkner the principal character of the romance who had selected this very spot to end a ruined existence in which attempt he was frustrated by the child jogging his arm to move him from her mother's grave his life being thus saved by the child's instrumentality he naturally became interested in her he is allowed to look through the few remaining papers of the parents among these he finds an unfinished letter of the wife evidently addressed to a lady he had known and also indications who the parents were he was much moved and offered to relieve the poor people of the child and to restore her to her relations
