the last decade has seen radical changes in higher education long held assumptions about university and academic autonomy have been shattered as public and political interest in quality standards and accountability have intensified efforts for reform the increased influence of the state and employers in the curriculum of higher education is exemplified by the increasing emphasis on so called core or transferable skills an emphasis supported by the dearing report which identified what is called key skills as necessary outcomes of all higher education programmes however there is little research evidence to support such assertions or to underpin the identification of good practice in skill development in higher education or employment settings further prescription has outrun the conceptualisation of such skills little attention has been paid to their theoretical underpinning and definitions or to assumptions concerning their transfer it approaches the question from two angles it considers first how skill development affects a country's international competitiveness and secondly what a government should do to develop a country's skills it concludes that development of skills is necessary for a country to make the transition from primary exports to manufactures and from labour intensive to skill intensive manufacturing this paper stresses that despite the fact that india is a fast developing economy difficulties have led the government to conclude that far more needs to be done to engender more employment opportunities for the majority of Indians to enable them to participate in the benefits of growth and to contribute to that growth to do this they must have education and training that equips them for the labor market one of the sources of the skilled workforce is the vocational education and training system however the government realizes that the system is not being able to appropriately respond to the needs of the labor market a key issue then is what reforms interventions are needed to improve the effectiveness of the system answering that question is far from easy and this paper attempts to provide some options for doing so on the one hand India faces the future with its changing realities on the other hand it must deal with the nature of its established traditions and structures this paper has laid out some key reforms that must be undertaken in different areas to make the vocational education and vocational training systems more responsive to the needs of the labor market the reform agenda is fairly comprehensive and all the reforms cannot be implemented immediately given this the paper has laid out some of the critical reforms that need to be undertaken in the short run first phase followed by others that can be undertaken over a period of 2-3 years the first phase focuses on reforms aimed at improving the quality and labor market relevance of the existing system while the medium term agenda also includes moving forward on mobilizing additional resources for the system especially once the quality has improved however the background work needed to undertake reforms in the medium term should also commence immediately these reforms should be treated as a package if only some are instituted while others are not it is unlikely that the objective of developing a truly demand responsive system will be effectively met the literature on rural America to the extent that it exists has largely been written by urban based scholars perpetuating out of date notions and stereotypes or by those who see little difference between rural and agricultural concerns as a result the real rural America remains much misunderstood neglected or ignored by scholars and policymakers alike in response Emery Castle offers The Changing American Countryside a volume that will forever change how we look at this important subject Castle brings together the writings of eminent scholars from several disciplines and varying backgrounds to take a fresh and comprehensive look at the forgotten hinterlands these authors examine the role of non-metropolitan people and places in the economic life of our nation and cover such diverse issues as poverty industry the environment education family social problems ethnicity race religion gender government public policy and regional diversity the authors are especially effective in demonstrating why rural america is so much more than just agriculture it is in fact highly diverse complex and interdependent with urban america and the international market place most major rural problems they contend simply cannot be effectively addressed in isolation from their urban and international connections to do so is misguided and even hazardous when one fourth of our population and ninety seven per cent of our land area is rural together these writings not only provide a new and more realistic view of rural life and public policy but also suggest how the field of rural studies can greatly enrich our understanding of national life
