the system of thought thought as a whole what if everything you think feel and perceive arises from a single interconnected system we often divide our experience into compartments intellect emotion memory perception yet these are not separate processes they combine to form one system thought in the system of thought thought as a whole we undertake a profound inquiry into the nature of thought and reveal it as a coherent system from the acquisition of information through perception to the processing of that information as knowledge and the response of knowledge through action inside this inquiry intellect emotion and body how thought expresses itself through all aspects of our being assumption and reaction how a single premise can shape your entire emotional and physical state knowledge and perception how thought arises from memory and perceives both the world and itself the thinker and the observer why the one who thinks and the one who looks are both formed by knowledge a unified model how all the activities of thought form a single dynamic system this book redefines thought not as a passive background process but as the active structure behind your experience and your very identity it reveals how what we call me is the movement of knowledge responding to sensation and how that movement creates the illusion of a separate self to see thought as a whole is to begin to understand it and only in understanding can there be freedom from its illusions
